

So You're Hiring Painters...

Let's Talk Real Talk

(Straight from years of homeowner feedback)

This isn't a brag sheet.
And it's definitely not marketing fluff.

This is an organic collection of real questions, frustrations, and “wow, I wish I knew that earlier” moments we've heard directly from homeowners over the years — sometimes before hiring us, sometimes after a less-than-great experience elsewhere.

We noticed the same patterns on repeat. So we figured... instead of pretending these things don't happen, let's talk about them — honestly.

“They were hard to reach... slow to respond... sometimes didn't even show up.”

This is usually the first warning sign.

Real talk:

If a company can't return calls, confirm appointments, or show up on time before the job starts, it rarely gets better once they're already paid.

We take communication seriously. We respond quickly, keep you informed, and if we don't have an answer yet, we'll tell you we're working on it. Radio silence helps no one.

“Another company was 30% cheaper than your quote. Why?”

Fair question — and one we hear a lot.

Let's clear this up:

This isn't the 1980s where a used-car salesman could slap the roof, smile real wide, and somehow convince you the price doesn't matter.

Homeowners are informed today:
Reviews. Photos. Materials. Processes. Pricing.

When bids are dramatically cheaper, something usually went missing:
Prep work. Skilled labor. Time. Or accountability.

You don't overpay when you hire quality — you just avoid paying twice.

“They said they could finish my entire house in one day.”

Sounds impressive.
Also... questionable.

Here's what that usually means:

Prep gets rushed. Protection gets skipped. Dry time gets ignored. And paint gets slapped on like everyone's late for dinner.

We focus on doing it right, not doing it fast — because paint jobs age. And rushed ones age badly.

“The company sounded great... then the crew showed up and it felt off.”

You're not imagining things when this happens.

Why it happens:

Many companies win work at low prices, then pass the job to whoever in their rolodex will take it. Sometimes you get lucky. Sometimes you get a crew that's just... there.

We work with trusted, proven crews, so what you're told upfront is what shows up at your door — skills included.

“They did great flooring in one room... but the kitchen paint was a horror show.”

Yep. We’ve heard this exact sentence.

Here’s why:

Some companies do everything. Which usually means they’re “pretty good” at a lot of things and exceptional at none.

We specialize only in drywall and painting. That’s it. No side hustles. No guessing. When painting is your craft, consistency follows.

“They said they were licensed and insured... then disappeared mid-job.”

Unfortunately, this one’s common.

Here’s the difference:

Paint Perfected is fully licensed, insured, and bonded. That means our license is on the line every time we take on a project.

Unlicensed painters can mess up and move on.

Licensed professionals are accountable.

Big difference.

“One painter said my cracked ceiling was a one-day fix. Another said two. Why?”

Great question — this is where things get sneaky.

The quick ‘one-day fix’ usually looks like this:

Mud over the crack.

Sand it.

Paint it.

Cross fingers.

It often looks great... for a few weeks.

A real repair looks like this:

Remove the failing drywall tape

Secure the moving drywall underneath

Re-tape properly

Compound in stages

Sand correctly

Repaint

More steps, more time — and a fix that actually lasts. Always make sure you’re comparing apples to apples, not shortcuts to real solutions.

“I went with the cheapest guys... now it looks terrible. Can you fix it?”

Yes. We can.

Just know that fixing someone else’s mistakes costs more because we’re doing the job twice — once to undo the damage, and once to do it correctly.

Real talk: spending wisely upfront usually saves money in the long run.

One Last (Important) Thing

Our approach has led to long-standing relationships with interior designers, custom home builders, and production builders. That trust didn’t happen by accident — it’s earned on repeat.
